

Operating systems manage processor scheduling and physical memory allocation

Relational databases organize structured tables with foreign key constraints.

Routers forward packets across network subnets using routing tables.